Two Solitudes

Mercedes Mill

I saw the longing in your eyes
But I failed to see the anguish
You so cleverly disguised
Your needs, I clearly read
But I never knew your true intentions
They were better left unsaid
I brushed your tears aside
Thought I could wipe away the memory
But couldn't push that far inside
You came so full of regrets
Your body still remembers
What your mind learnt to forget
Love is lost I've found when trust breaks down
Now we meet those two imposters just the same
Always out of bounds when love comes 'round
Don't even have the strength to share the blame
We ride the train of events
We never make our destination
Never making any sense
You say you leave without regret
But your body will remember
What your mind learns to forget
One love, two solitudes
One love, two solitudes

Two solitudes
There's no common ground when trust breaks down
Though everybody's love is in the air
Always out of bounds when love comes down
Too scared to climb the wall of our despair
Heartbroken
Who cares?
Love is lost I've found when trust breaks down
Now we meet those two imposters just the same
Always out of bounds when love comes 'round
Don't even have the strength to share the blame
And the sad thing is there's no end to this
Your tears are like the rain that beats the rain
And I wake at dawn to find you gone

Don't even have the strength to call your name
There's no common ground when trust breaks down
Though everybody's love is in the air
Always out of bounds when love comes down
Too scared to climb the wall of our despair
Love is lost I've found when trust breaks down
Now we meet those two imposters just the same
Always out of bounds when love comes 'round
Don't even have the strength to share the blame
