Under Your Tree

Sonata Arctica

The leaves they fall upon the day that makes a memory
those pleading eyes, echoing, silently in meThe final night I guard her sleep, I can do without the fear's down deep

There's nothing good in this morning...Oh, and I know...

invested feelings in the one I would outlast

My little friend is getting tired, fading fast...Did not want to see the signs of the dimming flame

I need to have more time

Tonight I fear I'll say goodbye to my little friend Don't want to let you go...The warmest heart I've found

I lower into the ground

my tears, forever with you resting under your treeYou have always loved this place it now belongs to you...

I need to set you free and go on aloneOne day in my feeble timeline

You gave me your heart and stole mine tomorrows came too fast for me to hear your slow, silent goodbye...The kindest heart I've found

I lowered into the ground your smile kept me alive back when the skies were stillYou always liked this place

now sleep under the tree

I planted here the day when you were bornI should have been ready, seen the nearing end my little old friend, a child.

That day I had to say goodbye and turn the bend but I'll never let go
