Superheroes

The Detours

I think about the days when we were young and care free
We never even bothered to ask
Who are we or Who we should be
We just exsisted with no resistance
We were superheroes then But times have changed and wars are raging underneath our skin We're dodging bullets and holding ground
Pushing, pulling and weighing down
What happened to that cape I used to wear?
Is it out there?
Is it out there?
And if you find it somewhere inside of me
Help me find it because I should be flying I wanna be a superhero again
And finish this war under my skin.
Oh but, History has shown us that when times are gettin hard It's time for us to grow and see exactly who we are The morning after the storm is always brighter than the rest Right?

Especially when you know you past your test
But the tests are only standerized In little public schools were they've given you all the answers and prepared you with the rules
I don't think life on earth is set up quite the same
It's every man out for himself
Until we make things change
Can we make things change?
So give me one thing
Something please
Just a glimmer of hope

I'm on my knees
I need to know that I'm not
That I'm not crazy
And if I am
then tell me now so I can Tie my cape to my straight jacket and bow out
'cause I am not about to go down this way
No not the superhero
Today
I guess I'm not the superhero
Today
