Caroline

Bill Baird

holding hands on frozen sidewalks on the seashore on the pier you need someone better than me and you'll know that as soon as i'm not hereoh lovely caroline you sprung out of this land a mother hen flaming and frothing but your tears only distract the facts have long been sung in the end we will be one but until that end we'll be apart surrounded by the snow that's piled up in place of the love we used to know
oh silly caroline
your false heart condemns this house that we built out of empty
oh silly caroline
i'm never coming back to this land but i'll always take you with meyour promises betray all the things you couldn't say the clenching of your fists can't squeeze the feeling abandoned and forgot the love you left to rot you only notice paint when it's peeling kind words can do a lot but there's no replacing time if you'd kindly just stop talking and pour me another glass of wine oh silly caroline
oh silly caroline
but i'll always take you with me
