Echo

Bendik Hofseth

Crossing the Rubicon
You'll go where your heart has gone
Standing here all alone
Under the stars, the moon, and the sun
I'll be crossing the Rubicon

I have built myself a tower, so that I can get a better view.
From high above the ground I watch my loved one leave, for what she must pursue.

Although it's sad, it seems as natural and obvious as breathing in and out, In comes the strength, out goes the doubt

I'll be crossing the Rubicon
you'll go where your heart has gone
Standing here all alone
under the stars, the moon, and the sun
I'll be crossing the Rubicon.

I've packed my bags with those few things that make me different from the rest.
So I set out to meet my anguish, learn to appreciate my best.

This is the point of no return, this is the place where towers burn, they burn down to the ground

Behind me lies a burning tower, ahead of me uncertainty.
The die is cast, I have no choice, so it must be

Past the playing grounds, where I met victory and loss, my language dies, I dry my eyes, as I step forward to the crossing.

Crossing the Rubicon,
you'll go where your heart has gone.
Standing here all alone,
under the stars, the moon, and the sun
I'll be crossing the Rubicon.

Solo

Crossing the Rubicon,
you go where your heart has gone.
Standing here all alone,
under the stars, the moon, and the sun
I'll be crossing the Rubicon.
