Sometimes the Radio

The Goodwill

I'd like to pretend that you and I were still friends you could make me laugh til I couldn't catch my breath but for now I will try to pretend you are still in my life and sometimes when the radio tunes into that song I choke back on my regret for things that I did to you and I'll run into you once in a while with words that fail me girl I'm sorry with my deepest honesty and when silence follows you it's a reminder of a mistake I will regret as much as it takes do you want out hearts to be torn wide open? and isn't it funny how hearts are meant to be broken like promises and sometimes when the radio tunes into that song I choke back on my regret for what I did to you and I'll run into you once in a while with words that fail me.

Lyrics provided by
https://damnlyrics.com/