Red Skies

Joe K. Walsh

Sure as the tides of time must roll, so shall we leave this shore.
And just as the turning stone's made smooth, we will one day worry no more.

Stones and the sea rock in rock out, under the heaving tide.
But red skies tonight as you take your leave, and we wait for the moon to arise.

Now as you have down so have we reaped, a bounty of love bestowed.
Now as the task has come to us, in your stead we'll strive to uphold.

Stones and the sea rock in rock out, under the heaving tide.
But red skies tonight as you take your leave, and we wait for the moon to arise.

And when we can see a brighter day, there we will sing your song.
Living in love and family till we join you passing along.

Stones and the sea rock in rock out, under the heaving tide.
But red skies tonight as you take your leave, and we wait for the moon to arise.
