

Tales

DuelJewel

We told our tales as we sat under morning's sleepy sky
With all the colors of the sunrise shining in our eyes
    One, then another with a story of yesterday's life
    Or of a lover who had gone in a moment of strife
No thought of sleep ever dwells upon the wise man's mind
    Some task or audience stealing every moment of his time
Thus we have learned to live while mortal men stand waiting to die
    How can we do what must be done in just one short life
    And if you ask then you must know
    If you still doubt you should be told
        It was not we that made it so
        It was by those who went before
        And there you sit tomorrow's child
            So full of love, so full of life
        But you must rise to meet the day
            Lest you become another tale
        And there you sit tomorrow's child
            So full of love, so full of life
        But you must rise to meet the day
            Lest you become another tale
Another tale, another tale, another tale
