The Act We Act

Sugar

Im watching you walk
As you walk that distant way
Take that thing away from me
Take away most everythingI couldn't say Id blame you
But you should never look in back
You wouldn't be to blame
If you couldn't take it backHours slipping by as you watch
The worlds collide
And now youre nothing more
Than another passerbyThe dark it turns to light
In a distant flash of night
I'm rolling with the tide, I confide
The act we wear it thin againIf affection holds you back
Oh, then what is left to hold
If I could find the answer
To that question then Id knowThe thoughts that clutter up your mind
And leave me feeling drained
And walking, pacing up the walls
Across the floor againAnd all the things I havent seen
Once the final curtain has been raised
The act, we act is wearing thin
The act, we act we under my skinThe words, the words we said goodbye
The words left choking in my mind
The act, we act is wearing thin
I think we wear it out againAnother big explosion
Leaving you hoping
That something that once held you down
Could leave you feeling on the groundThe confusion that persists
Decisions that you guessed
The one to stay and watch this
The one you might have missedAll the things I havent seen
Once the final curtain has been raised
The act, we act is wearing thin
The act, we act we under my skinThe words, the words we said goodbye
The words left choking in my mind
The act, we act is wearing thin
I think we wear it out again, nowThe act, we act we under my skin, now
The act, we act we under my
Forming a conclusion
