Wilderman

Toby Johnson

My brother and I, built dens at night. Out in the pine our skin grew thicker over time. We took our turns. And we learned to love our little minds. We walked into the wilderness, bearing the courage of the Wilderman. They're hiding the night in the trees with silhouette figures. Shapes and shadows, they start to surround. We shone our torches and made monsters with our hands, We weren't afraid because we taught them how to dance. You're so blind to our way of life. Oooooh, carry on your heavy load, oooooh is life a burden on your backbones? If so take control, build a hill beneath your home, where the gravity is weaker and the stars will give you hope. If the lines upon your hands can predict this all, Why are we wating, Why are we wasting time? My brother and I, we use our minds, we set up traps to catch the beats before they bite.They come from under and they try to take you from your life. We followed footprints, down to the lake, we lost the scent to shadows cast from outer space. We passed our curfew, but we knew the Wilderman would wait. Strength in numbers we formed our parade. Over a hilltop and we found them in a cave. We didn't fight because we taught them to behave. You're so blind when you close your eyes. Oooooh follow us into the unknown. Oooooh, are you wild or do you walk alone? If so, take control, build a hill beneath your home, where the gravity is weaker and the stars give you hope.If the lines upon your hands, predict this all. Why are we waiting, Why are we wasting time? Further and further, watch them run. I proved you wrong, we proved you wrong. You lived each day in your cowardly ways. You lived each day to deliver me pain. Oooooh, carry on your heavy load. Oooooh, is life a burden on your backbones? If so take control, build a hill beneath your home, where the gravity is weaker and the stars give you hope. If the lines upon your hands predict this all. Why are we waiting, Why are we wasting time?
