Banish the Wicked

Seventh Wonder

When the morning arrives, the whispering wind reveals
The intentions of the night.
-so don't you tease the power watching over us!
The childless and sad mother cries:
-oh please, be careful!
-so children stop your foolish games and smile towards the light and don't you dare crySo many friends have died...
And we all know it's too many...
How can we possibly break this curse?
I don't know...
She will probably punish me for even
Thinking about leaving the village...And the people know
They got no place to go...When the goddess dance across the heavens
She's so bright, like an arch of light
They couldn't dream of denying her will tonight
The righteous will stand
And the wicked are banished from her land!When the evening arrives, they stand before the queen
May her judgement free or fail the lawless.
The widow cries a silent tear
The scar of a justified fear of loosing
Cause someone's watching over them,
Impaling every move with raging northern lightSo many friends have died...
And we all know it's too many...
How can we possibly break this curse?
I don't know...
She will probably punish me for even
Thinking about leaving the village...And the people know
To turn the lights down low...When the goddess dance across the heavens
She's so bright, like an arch of light
They couldn't dream of denying her will tonight
The righteous will stand
And the wicked are banished from her land!One light, one spell, one dance
For all the breathless
So scared, inside
-spare me, goddess!When she's dancing all across the heavens
She's so bright like, an arch of light
They couldn't dream of denying her will tonight
When she's dancing all across the heavens
She so bright... so bright!

They couldn't dream of denying her will tonight
And the righteous will stand
As she'll banish the wicked from her land
