Happy Endings

Something for Kate

this town makes my mind slow down lines in my face like highways now chasing breezes, kicking boulders and all of the while just getting olderi leave pieces of paper pieces of myself along the way out the window, out the window and i tell myself thati'll come back for them before i go and then i won't sing this song tomorrowreason calls i'm never listening there's always something more distracting and you take everything so seriously then you leave and burn up on re-entryfor happy endings all these little victories gathered up and hung on the wall like trophys i tell myself thati've been down this road before so i won't sing this song anymorei've been down this road before so i won't sing this song anymore i've been down on myself enough before
so i won't sing this song anymore
