Elements

Katie Kuffel

The wax drips down to the ground
In puddles at your feet
And the world you know goes below
Now the mud's caked up to your knees
And I know that it's slow going
And there's no knowing how it turns out in the end
Just hear me out and let yourself begin to

Let go of those "I don't know"s
And try to show your common lows
To those around who've seen you down
And I never want to see you drowning

You can't replace the virtues
That were lost as paper cranes
But when you tried to burn them
The world decides to rain
So you try to survive without air anymore
You say oxygen's not enough
For you to be sure to

Let go of those "I don't know"s
And try to show your common lows
To those around who've seen you down
And I never want to see you drowning, no

When the water in your lungs
Becomes too much to bare
Come down to earth and
In your rebirth, I'll try to repair
Every rip and every slip
You made along the way
And the stories told
As you walk through the coals
All still seem to say to

Let go of those "I don't know"s
And try to show your common lows
To those around who've seen you down

And I never want to see you drowning

Let go of those "I don't know"s
And try to show your common lows
To those around who've seen you down
And I never want to see you drowning again.
