

I Do

Abra Moore

everything around you starts to crumble and you wonder how your ever gonna make it though the day and all of a sudden your legs give way you tumble down and with every step you take you lose your way but every once in a while, somethings got to bring you back and all the lights spinning around can't help you remember how and who could ever understand, well i do well i do, well i do, well i do you ever find that happy you are after that tender taste that suckle on the vine spend all yours days chasing down the answer to a question you know you'll never find when every face is a stranger, how can you know when to trust and all the stars in the sky, can't make you remember why and who could ever love you now, well i do well i do, well i do, well i do and though the darkest night, when your back and blue who's gonna shine the light, who still believes in you but every once in a while, somethings gotta break to give
and all the stars in the sky, can't make you remember why and who could ever understand, well i do (but every once in a while) well i do, (somethings got to bring you back)
well i do, (and all the stars in the sky can't make you remember why)
well i do (and who could ever understand) well i do (but every once in a while)
well i do, (somethings got to bring you back)
well i do, (and all the stars in the sky can't make you remember why)
well i do (and who could ever understand) well i do (but every once in a while)
well i do, (somethings got to bring you back)
well i do, (and all the stars in the sky can't make you remember why) (fades out)
