

The Ending of Our Yesterday

Agathodaimon

And when the moon enrapt the streams
And trembles on the fen
A thousand years have flown it seems
Since then, since then For if today I part the veil
And see what time portended
I feel that long ago the tale
Was ended Little I knew in youth's enchantment
That it is alike absurd
Or to lean against a shadow
Or believe a woman's word For if today I part the veil
And see what time portended
I feel that long ago the tale
Was ended Though she was betrayed
Through empty words spoken
I wished she'd have stayed
Remain with a heart that's broken For I no longer am confined
In that sweet country's spell
I have left you far behind
Farewell Fair autumn still its breeze delays
Upon the springs that wail and sigh
And through the leaves the whisper strays
Of my sad dreams that now must die, die
