

Half Asleep

Glass Hands

Follow me
Keep your horizon in hand
And a foot on the solid ground
Half asleep
Can I step backward with my loose ends
And move forward with my pretense? And she was laying with her wrists slit
Crying in the bathtub, singing a song
And she drowned in the water
She wouldn't wake up again just to tell the story
You shouldn't bleed an ocean
If you can't cry a river first You shouldn't bleed an ocean
If you can't cry a river first I woke up this morning just to carry the torch
That burned my house down
It made me wish that I could touch the ground
I have a problem, but it's not you this time
This is reality
Here's to all that's left of me So follow me
Keep your horizon in hand
And a foot on the solid ground
Half asleep
Can I step backward with my loose ends
And move forward with my pretense? You will lose hope one day
And some of us won't get through our pain
But don't you ever say you can't regain Life isn't fair
But not a single book was written that's said a positive one is rare
Half asleep is where I want to be
A middle man with a shadow to cast A silhouette, if it is my last
I'd be writing my will at fifteen and Look where I'm at
I took a big step back
I'm here to live my life in peace
Without fear of all the devils in my closet I woke up this morning just to carry the torch
That burned my house down
It made me wish that I could touch the ground
I have a problem, but it's not you this time
This is reality
Here's to all that's left of me So follow me
I can make you dream while you're half asleep (I woke up this morning just to carry the torch
That burned my house down

It made me wish that I could touch the ground
I have a problem, but it's not you this time
Here's to all that's left of me)
