

The Ugliest Happy You've Ever Seen

KEN mode

No matter how much I do, there is an overwhelming sense that I'm not doing enough;

In every facet of my life. A heavy psychological burden to be carrying;

Like a backpack full of fifty five pound plates.

But it brings with it a clear message: never accept mediocrity.

A hunger that can never be fed; True satisfaction never felt.

Couple this with a deep rooted, unspecified anger that has existed and remained constant for the greater part of my post-pubescent life, save for a few short periods of general contentment.

And we're starting to paint a seemingly dreary picture.

But fret not my dear, for within this state I am driven.

Within this state I cannot fail.

Within this state I will attack the challenges I've laid before myself without reserve and with unbridled passion.

Within this state I find life.

This is the ugliest happy you've ever seen.
