Who Divided

Joan Osborne

I get into my car, turn the radio on
Drive by your house, your window, your bed
Well, it's been two years gone, since we've been over and done
Ah, but your voice is still ringing in my head
Who divided up the days into hours, the hours into minutes
How could they really be that smart
Who divided up the minutes into seconds, they must have had a broken
Must have had a broken heartI saw you way up town, another girl by your side
I knew by your smile she was more than just a friend
I'm gonna bury my heart in a coffin so deep, Lord
Knowin' I'll never feel your arms againWho divided up the days into hours, the hours into minutes
How could they really be that smart
Who divided up the minutes into seconds, they must have had a broken
Must have had a broken heart'Cause when love is over, you're gonna learn about time
You're gonna plot and scheme, you're gonna weep and moan
You're gonna wonder why, why, whyIt's 3:00 a.m. says the clock on the wall
Here in the dark of the night the world stands still
I'm reaching for the phone, that old number to call
Oh, but I know I can't stand to feel that chillWho divided up the days into hours, the hours into minutes
How could they really be that smart
Who divided up the minutes into seconds, they must have had a broken
Must have had a broken heartWho divided up the days into hours, the hours into minutes
How could they really be that smart
Who divided up the minutes into seconds, they must have had a broken
Must have had a broken heart, oh, they must have had a broken heart
They must have, must have, must have had a broken heart
