

Moss & Marrow

Joan Shelley

And wish you well my little darling wish you well where you go only mountains could carry a worry with a weight like that Moss and marrow, flowers hidden Lichen on an eastern side pulling through us what was once lost to be laid in light and boil the bones in the clear spring water bring that water to my mouth gonna lose my mother gonna lose my father and the child is gone A beaten path where my memory meets you in golden autumn evening light leaves enclose us, and turning takes us from each other's side
And wish you well my little darling
    wish you well, where you go I release you, I release you to the wild open

Song Discussions is protected by U.S. Patent 9401941. Other patents pending.

Lyrics provided by <https://damnlrics.com/>