

You've Met with a Terrible Fate, Haven't You?

Death at the Revel

Set my mind into motion, unveil the secrets of my monsters consciousness
Set my mind into motion, dig up the body part that points to where the deed was done
Set my mind into motion, unveil the secrets of my monsters consciousness

Three days and three nights is what's left to resolve what's been caused, grief overwhelms all the souls in this dark and dying world we deny our fate for what's waiting upon us, we deny our fate for what's waiting upon us

I see an empty shell of lies, we all feel the sorrow that's in your eyes
I know that nightmares can come true, don't let them get the best of you

In the waiting room we all end up in, when it falls, this will be the end of the world, the anger that grows and penetrates your mind

It blinds and closes the eyes of acceptance
It blinds and closes the eyes of acceptance
The price you pay with lives will put you in a grave of sorrow, bargaining your way out
Puts you back, to your normal state, back to your normal state

Feeling death's emptiness leaving you behind, all alone
We can't keep on hiding behind our masks, our we'll be gone

What do you really feel inside now, have we conquered the world or just our own grief
What do you really feel now, are we crushing the world

You've met with a terrible fate, haven't you?

I see an empty shell of lies, we all feel the sorrow that's in your eyes

Constantly surrounded by ghosts that come to haunt me
Are we crushing the world, or does it put its weight on your shoulders
