

Damage

Ten Foot Pole

She was working all her life
For justice in this world
But every time she made some gains
Someone would kick her down again Then damage takes its toll
The rising, the falling, the rising, the falling
Can you get back up again? Then damage takes its toll
The rising, the falling, the rising, the falling
Can you get back up again? It's easier to tear apart than build
Damage has momentum of its own
It takes less time to break things down
Than to wait around until they're grown It's easier to tear apart than build
Damage has momentum of its own
It takes less time to break things down
Than to wait around until they're grown She was looking all her life
For a mate that understood
But every time she gave her heart
She ended up scarred and alone Then damage takes its toll
The rising, the falling, the rising, the falling
Can you get back up again? Then damage takes its toll
The rising, the falling, the rising, the falling
Can you get back up again? It's easier to tear apart than build
Damage has momentum of its own
It takes less time to break things down
Than to wait around until they're grown It's easier to tear apart than build
Damage has momentum of its own
It takes less time to break things down
Than to wait around until they're grown
