

Never Enough

Del Amitri

With two hundred people
In suits all the same
You walk off that last lonely train On the half finished buildings
Only seagulls remain
As you try to think back
To the root of this pain And life ain't worth living
Without a little love
But a little love is never enough So some folks are fighting for freedom
But you're just fighting the flab
And therein lies the reason
That life is a drag So you gaze at the television
As some publicity goons
Cut loose those useless balloons Life ain't worth living
Without a little love
But a little love is never enough Down in the darkness of your lying little heart
There's a space for you to change
So you can take this world apart These days the morning mirror
Seems to say to you now
That you used to be pretty
But you're alright now And sometimes you find you're dreaming
As you're late for work again
Thinking there's not many trees
You can see from this train Life ain't worth living
Without a little love
But a little love is never enough Life ain't worth living
Without a little love
But a little love is never enough
Is never enough, no, no, no, no
Never enough, never enough, never enough A little love is never enough
A little love is never enough
But a little love
But a little love
But a little love
