Becoming Us

Gillian Redstone

I never knew what color blue really was until I saw it in your eyes that night
I never knew how good my contacts could burn in my eyes from staring at such a sight
I never knew your lap would be a better pillow than all the royal cushions in the world

But now I know...

And the Charles never looked more inviting
And Boston never seemed more in love
So through the swaying of the trees and the stomping of our feet
You and me became us

You never knew my connection with John Hughes, but somehow The Breakfast Club was on
You never knew that I was rarely up past two, but we were up late laughing far past dawn
You never knew how much it meant when you stared and said you just like looking at me

But now you know...

And the Charles never looked more inviting
And Boston never seemed more in love
So through the swaying of the trees and the stomping of our feet
You and me became us

The butterflies in my stomach they all know your name
And the way you look at me at night keeps running through my brain
We didnâ€™t know that we would both fall deeper than all of outer space

But now we knowâ€¦

And the Charles never looked more inviting
And Boston never seemed more in love
So through the swaying of the trees and the stomping of our feet
You and me became us

A sunrise never felt more enlightening
And though Iâ€™m one whoâ€™s not quick to trust
But through the early morning air, and your hands all in my hair
You and me became us

You and me became us
You and me became us
