

Wanderlust

Slowtide

So this is waking up like waking from the dead stand with bare hands again, that's all I ever get it's been the longest day, but something drags me on I put on my shoes again and walked into the sun

The end is vague, the chance is small and there's nothing to rely on after all but I got faith, know I can trust that the world wants to be seen with wanderlust

This heart needs so much more, we're looking for the same
If noone's daring, noone's winning in this game
Now here's the afterglow, the grief of what is gone
I put on my shoes again and walked into the sun

this life is fancy-free and stories will be spun Put on my shoes again and walked into the sun
