B-Side

Nancy Middleton

morning came easy followed by love in the afternoon so light and breezy like those AM tunes turn on the transistor static never sounded so good from under your headboard of maple wood and summer was long and so were the songs on the B-side evening was patient waiting for dusk to ride like a (?) watching a child play in the setting sun and under the street light we shared a warm beer and a cigarette and talked about all the things we hadn't done yet and you borrowed the car and we drove out as far as the county line

then leaves were falling just like the tears that fell from our eyes freedom was calling a soft good bye

and summer was gone and life pushed us on and the frost on the lawn took us inside upstairs in your room unaware of the gloom we turned over to the B-side
