

The Simple Truth (A Child Is Born)

Chris de Burgh

A child is born on a battlefield
A soldier boy falls to his knees
And a woman cries in joy and pain
When will we live in peace again? A child is born where the wild wind blows
In a country torn from the south to the north
And a family runs from day to day
When will we see our home again? When will we see the simple truth
The only thing that's worth a damn Life of a child is more than a forest
Life of a child is more than a border, could ever be A child is born in the desert sun
A tiny life has just begun
And a mother cries for her hungry baby
When will I feed my boy again? A child is born to an ordinary home
East or west, it could be anyone
But we all wanna know, will my child survive to see the day
When we will be secure again? When will we see the simple truth
That the only thing that's worth a damn Life of a child is more than a forest
Life of a child is more than a border Life of a child is more than a region
Life of a child is only a heartbeat from eternity We must believe for the sake of humanity
Oh, we must believe For the sake of humanity, we must believe
