Ruination

Job for a Cowboy

The Earth slowly rots into a malignant tumor,
Breeding no life for the future of the world
In wake of a nuclear war
Bodies rise from the fractured streets
And decomposing fields of abandonment
Their bodies and faces mutated and disfigured
Still breathing through their brimful lungs
They limp and crawl across the ruins
They once claimed on a leisurely ongoing march
Their flesh still burns,
The skin blackens
And embers into the dimming air
The Earth slowly rots into a malignant tumor,
Breeding no life for the future of the world
The Earth slowly rots into a malignant tumor,
Breeding no life for the future of the world
In wake of a nuclear war
Bodies rise from the fractured streets
And decomposing fields of abandonment
Their bodies and faces mutated.

The Earth slowly rots into a malignant tumor,
Breeding no life for the future of the world
In wake of a nuclear war
Bodies rise from the fractured streets
And decomposing fields of abandonment
The Earth slowly rots into a malignant tumor,
Breeding no life for the future of the world
In wake of a nuclear war
Bodies rise from the fractured streets
And decomposing fields of abandonment
The Earth slowly rots into a malignant tumor,
Breeding no life for the future of the world
In wake of a nuclear war
Bodies rise from the fractured streets
And decomposing fields of abandonment...
