

Between The Daylight And The Dark

Mary Gauthier

Well, the grasses are swaying, sun's going down
Music is playing, you're weaving through town
Pull into the drive way, toss it in park You stare out of the windshield, out into the world
It was all for the love of a wayward girl
Who left you with a second place smile and a broken heart And the streetlights are starting to flicker to life
They glow for a minute then they get bright
Fireflies light up, circle and spark there's nothing really that you can do
Put your hands in your pockets, try to get through
The distance between the daylight and the dark And the front porch flags lie themselves down
Like forgotten soldiers and old wedding gowns
In closets unopened and graves without any marks As the night curtains lower behind the rooftops
Shadows dance across the sidewalks
And ricochet off of the houses like pieces of art And your mind is reeling as the sky is changing
All you're feeling and you're re-arranging
The rest of your life like lines on an old sailors chart You climb back in, fire the ignition
Put your hands on the wheel, head into the distance
The distance between the daylight and the dark
