Fluorescent (The Total Orchest

Solefald

[Flourescent half](Gaia sips the drink of artificial red carefully served by a flourescent skyShe swallows the light only to throw up shadows minutes later on a broken public toiletInside her the neonism is fed until it burst with colour unleashing the brightest shadow of all timesIn the street metallic streams wash the concrete shores Gaia is wet and sick but she doesn't care anymoreHair sticks to her face as she screams being absorbed by coloursNow she's the brightest one of all but no one's there to see)[The Total Orchestra half]a noise is released; high-pitched voices, the rumbling of tin and machines, devilish decibelsopen my eyes, see what I expected; red melted plastic, yellow neon, pompous sunset over Lucky Beachwhen everything abates at last the universal glue cements wrong to true, keeps the tongues in place the weightlessness from life the total orchestra concluded
