John K. Samson

I want you to know what I forgive you for
Now that you're all ashes anyway
Every step into the river pushes you further awayI want you to hear the farm apologize
For letting you believe you could return
I want you to dream in all the languages we couldn't learnI want you to write my name
Under your name, with the year
I was born and you began to disappearI want you to watch the generation sprawl
Constellations in the northern sky
I want every satellite to circle you when you arriveI want every highway sign
To remember we were here
I want you to take your time to disappearI want you to know what I forgive you for
Now that you're all ashes anyway
