

Better to Miss You

Jesse O'Mahoney & Thomas Ellis

It's better to miss you
better to miss you still than never to have had you never to have held you never to have kissed your lips

my heart has had it It's broken down again A job too big for any, mechanic to mend
Its windows are broken
Its fender is bent No can of oil can fix it there's no monkey wrench

better to miss you
better to miss you
better to miss you still
never to have held you
never to have kissed your lips

It's better to miss you than not to have known you let me tell you why The scratches on the bonnet are my love letters and sonnets So i'm going to miss you all night

I've been wracking up the miles for far too long The seats are worn out and the radiator grills gone And though the steering wheel works just about fine It takes me in the wrong direction most of the time

It's better to miss you

better to miss you still
never to have held you
never to have kissed your lips
