

Imaginary Friend

This Frontier Needs Heroes

Lying on my back again I can hear it in the wind you had picked a fight my mind would start to bend are you an imaginary friend last night my bed was colder than coffin i fabricated everything you said the weight of the world is heavier than lead so i turned to pray instead why wont you let me in why wont you let me in why'd you have to stop before i could begin why wont you let me in paralyzed is better than a prison looking long is better than living you stabbed me in the heart the moment your forgiven what do i do with all my passion you promised that we could play pretend i thought that we would play pretend its not my intention on dragging you to the end if your my imaginary friend
ranting paranoia will destroy you the devils idle hands will employ you it is not my meaning to annoy you so if you think it best i will avoid you
