

Morning Song

The Lumineers

The carbonation in my drink
Bubbles rise while my heart sinks
And all i tend to do is think of you
Was it easier to pack your bags
And book that flight to Paris
As the plane began to move that afternoon
And when all the trains have pulled away from local stations in decay
It's I who waits, it's you late again
And did you think of me when you made love to him?
Was it the same as us or was it different?
It must have been
And all the pretty dames
They hug and kiss you all the same
And when they go they're gone
And not running late

Oh all, all the pretty dames
And the kids that you hold in your arms
With promises to protect them from harm
They grow, and they go, and you're all alone
All the kids, all the kids that you hold
And it's a shame that it ends this way
With nothing left to say
So just sit on your hands while i walk away
It's a shame, it's a shame, it's a shame
When my hands begin to shake
When bitterness is all i taste
And my car won't stop cause i cut the brakes
I hold on to a hope in my fate
Oh oh, ah ah, hey hey
May you return to love one day
Well i hope, i pray you get what you gave
Oh oh, ah ah, hey hey
