

English Curse

Frank Turner

Many years back when these old oaks were young, not long after the north men had come a low and evil deed was done in the dark of the new forest
in the dark of the new forest.

From the shores of Normandy King William came to Albee? and fair? king Harold to slay with greed in his heart and a scuralous? claim he took the land for his own
he took the land for his own.

Now John was a blacksmith an honest, old man he raised up his children and he worked with his hands and his familys forge? in a patch of land in the dark of the new forest
in the dark of the new forest.

King william rode out after his victory to ravage the land and his hunger to feed for hunting ground in the wessex street he took the land for his own
he took the land for his own.

But if you steal the land of an english man then you shall know this curse your firstborn sons warm blood will run upon the english earth.

Now King Williams son was called Rufus the Red he took up the crown when his father was dead and he roamed the hunting grounds in his stead
in the dark of the new forest
in the dark of the new forest.

But Johns curse, it called out and Lord Tirell fired low his arrow struck Rufus with a sickening blow and he fell from his hourse to the ground below and the land took him for its own
and the land took him for its own.

So if you steal the land of an english man then you shall know this curse
upon the english earth.

not long after the north men had come
a low and evil deed was done
in the dark of the new forest.
