

The War Was In Color

Advisory - the following lyrics contain explicit language:

I see you've found a box of my things
Infantries, tanks and smoldering airplane wings
These old pictures are cool, tell me some stories
Was it like the old war movies?
Sit down son, let me fill you in Where to begin? Let's start with the end
This black and white photo, don't capture the skin
From the flash of a gun to a soldier who's done
Trust me grandson, the war was in color From shipyard to sea, from factory to sky
From rivet to rifle, from boot camp to battle cry
I wore the mask up high on a daylight run
That held my face in its clammy hand
Crawled over coconut logs and corpses in the coral sand Where to begin? Let's start with the end
From the shock of a shell or the memory of smell
If red is for Hell, the war was in color I held the canvas bag over the railing
The dead released with the ship still sailing
Out of our hands and into the swallowing sea I felt the crossfire stitching up soldiers
Into a blanket of dead and as the night grows colder
In a window back home, a Blue Star is traded for Gold Where to begin? Let's start with the end
When metal is churned and bodies are burned
Victory earned, the war was in color Now I lay in my grave at age 21
Long before you were born, before I bore a son
What good did it do? Well, hopefully for you
A world without war, a life full of color Where to begin? Start with the end
This black and white photo never captured my skin
Once it was torn from an enemy thorn
Straight through the core, the war was in color Where to begin? Let's start with the end
This black and white photo never captured my skin
From the flash of a gun to a soldier who's done
Trust me grandson, the war was in color Trust me grandson, the war was in color
Trust me grandson, the war was in color
