Rise Against

Can you hear the desperate cries that are calling out your name
Twisting your arms, holding out their hands and tugging at your sleeve?
And do you feel this underlying sense of urgency?
Or are you as blind as me?
I hit the ground and I'm still running
But I need a place to stay tonight
I swear I'll be gone in the morning
I just need somewhere now
I can't bear the thought of losing, I dread the attention winning brings
And ever since the day I came here, I can stand without your strings
I'm so sick of all these people, but I'm scared to be alone
And if this life has taught me anything, I forgot it long ago and so I
Hit the ground and I'm still running
But I need a place to stay tonight
Swear I'll be gone in the morning
I just need somewhere warm to close my eyes
I hit the ground and I'm still running
But I need a place to stay tonight
I swear I'll be gone in the morning
I just need somewhere warm to close my eyes
The heart is something you can't control
We either choose to follow or be left on our own
So we're leaving here on a less traveled road
As the desperate cries grow louder
But I know we're getting close, getting close
And so I hit the ground and I'm still running
But I need a place to stay tonight
I swear I'll be gone in the morning
I just need somewhere warm to close my eyes
Hit the ground and I'm still running
But I need a place to stay tonight
Swear I'll be gone in the morning
I just need somewhere warm to close my eyes
