The Difference In Me

Diana DeGarmo

Beneath empty walls
I've been talking to myself again
You don't hear a word
Why bother to explain it whenYou say that I should try
But I feel I'm half alive

And the rest of me is somewhere elseI wish the world would just spin faster Get to my happy ever after, you're looking at me

You're waiting to see the difference

The difference in meAnd you keep telling me to grow up

But why should I, it's never good enough

How could I be when you never see the difference

The difference in meI don't wanna fight

Don't care whose right or wrong anymore

I'm sick of all this pain

Can it be the way it was beforeWhen I always made you smile

Seems it's been a while

'Cause now you're always out of reachI wish the world would just spin faster Get to my happy ever after, you're looking at me

You're waiting to see the difference

The difference in meAnd you keep telling me to grow up

But why should I, it's never good enough

How could I be when you never see the difference

The difference in meYou say that I should try

But I feel I'm half alive

And the rest of me is somewhere elseI wish the world would just spin faster

Get to my happy ever after, you're looking at me

You're waiting to see the difference

The difference in meAnd you keep telling me to grow up

But why should I, it's never good enough

How could I be when you never see the difference

The difference in meI changed my hair and I doing my clothes

And you say, you see but you don't notice the difference

The difference, the difference in meI'm the same as I was before

I'm not afraid to walk right out that door

See the difference, the difference in me
