

Throughout All Time

Dwight Yoakam

I'll still see you walking silently
Through the shadows in my mind
And a vision of your sweet, blue eyes
Creeps into my dreamful sleep tonight
You still haunt the deepness of my memories
I guess you will throughout all time
Little girl, I still remember
The very dress you wore on that day
It was so soft, a shade of violet
Lord, how it took my breath away
As the sunshine on that morning
Broke across your golden hair
How I wished to hold you tightly
Lord, but I was shy and did not dare
But, I'll still see you walking silently
Through the shadows in my mind
And a vision of your sweet, blue eyes
Creeps into my dreamful sleep tonight
You still haunt the deepness of my memories
I guess you will throughout all time
Many nights I've sat and wondered
If you might be somebody's wife
But if you're not, I'd long to see you
If just to tell you, how I've pined
I've been known to ask strangers
That I thought might just pass your way
They would tell you of these feelings
We might meet again someday
But, I'll still see you walking silently
Through the shadows in my mind
And a vision of your sweet, blue eyes
Creeps into my dreamful sleep tonight
Yeah, you still haunt the deepness of my memories
I guess you will throughout all time
You still haunt the deepness of my memories
I guess you will throughout all time
