

Around the Door

Aubrey Ashburn

Sometimes I have no words to say
When searching alone for that milestone.
Is it truth or lie? 'Cause I wanna go home
Wherever that may be. We learn to take what we know
And throw it around,
Holding out for love
But fearing somehow,
The actions speak louder,
Feeling too high,
The confusion inside us,
Struggle to be found.
You're peeking for a way around the door,
Any way but through.
You've got to cast away your carefulness
And push your way into the room. We're locked on the train,
Living a life in each town.
And tasting the ground.
(?)
Are riding from the distance,
Only circling around
What's left to be found. You're looking for a way around the door,
Any way but through.
You've got to cast away your carefulness
And push your way into the room.
If you always do what you've always done,
You're gonna get what you always get. It's time for motion.
The notion of change.
The pivots behind it.
Today makes the flame.
However, frozen in fear
And hidden in pain,
We only prolong
A lifeless game. You're looking for a way around the door,
Any way but through.
You've got to cast away your carefulness
And push your way into the room. You're looking for a way around the door,
Any way but through.
You've got to cast away your carefulness

And push your way into the room. You're looking for a way around the door,
Any way but through.
You've got to cast away your carefulness
And push your way into the room.
