

Turncoat

Lowtalker

Turncoat parents and the children that never arrived pawn shop rings and a road swallowed up by the sky and though the static on the radio was signaling that this was the end they still sang on just like lovers 'til the day that they decided to be just friends and never speak again to keep from caving in So baby, this is freedom and you finally are out on your own and you left in such a hurry but you'll never get away from this home cause the kids, they aren't happy and I don't know how you thought they could be what, with all those misconceptions it's a miracle that they were ever conceived and they don't look a damn like me but I'll still feign belief So baby, this is freedom
