The Watcher's Monolith

Agalloch

Blue textures cascade downward to the base of the monolith

Like brush strokes on a canvas of souls

Two arms reach out a cloak of silent nihil

Revenants untouched by the scythe

They are lost in the dark woods of timeAloft in the landscape that you hail

I am the fog that seeps over here in the early hoursStanding proud in the hollow of the land

A vestige of deeper purity etched in spirit against the skyThe menhir had runes carved in limbs of oaken sovereignty and could see the ages growing from within the palms

I can feel the era slipping into oblivion, no longer grasping the textures

I am slowly becoming stoneAs wolves celebrate the dusk, an old voice of wisdom haunts the valeShapes flicker in the fire light through the windows The woodlands burn with grace

Their silence drowns the ageAs wandering ghosts pass through the flames
A new age of rebirth lights the dawnBut who are they who pass by the window?
The shapes; like black solar wheels scorched in the snow by gods of the stone...

This elder stone shall never fall!Cast the aeons into the void

So that no other can seek them No age, no hands shall taint them Pour the sorrows into the sun

They are lost forever in dark woods of time

Carve the symbols into the stone

So that another can find them

No age, no hands shall change them

Pour the ages into the sun

They are lost forever in the dark woods of time

Lyrics provided by https://damnlyrics.com/