

Deathmask Divine (live)

The Black Dahlia Murder

Removal of the eyes gives my heart a saddened chill
I preserve them in formaldehyde to gaze upon at will How their greenish flecks befell me that starlit winter's night
I lost all that I ever was while locked within their sight
Before you sits a broken man, your fragile pinkish heart in hand
Peculiar how it can hurt so bad while love is only in the mind
I sew the gaping chest work, each thread is made with love
The bosom where I would rest my face is covered in your blood
No, this is not the end
You'll live on eternally
Oh Lord, it's not the end
My secret you'll forever be I interrupt this transformation, a familiar lust swelling in me
A long and soulful kiss, the shades are drawn, the living world can't see
The coil of entrails, how curious the smell
So pungent to my eager nostrils, hands further compelled
No, it's not the end
Forever you'll be in my arms I could never let you go, my darling, cold and blue
I wonder, are you dreaming still, spread eagled, blood removed
I weave the sucking trocar beneath your bruising skin
Tonight I'll lay beside you, darling, in necromantic sin Pinned to the bed sheets like a prized butterfly, you're mine
I hear your voice so precious, echoing deeply inside
I did my best to love you while you did live and breathe
This tender taxidermy, trophy of the bereaved I could never let you go, my darling, cold and blue
I wonder, are you dreaming still, spread eagled, blood removed
Tonight I'll lay beside you, darling, in necromantic sin
