

Your Mind Has Left Your Body

Paul Kantner

You have left your body, be aware if you care
Your mind has left your body, and for this one moment
You are under the polar ice cap, in a place we call home
How is it there... white bear, like that, where you grow
Now all of you come back to here and now
Elsewhen to there, and move on out the other way
Where.... do you find yourself, floating, growing, there
Riders of the rainbow
Let it grow, let it grow
You can exercise your mind, on where you want to go
And you can see the city lights flashin' two thousand miles below you
You can feel the sands of Zanzibar, or pierce the nearest sun
Find out what... and who you are, and if you need to run
Riders of the rainbow
Let it grow, let it grow
Riders of the rainbow
Let it grow, let it grow
There is one moment in your life, and it can come at any time
And you remember all of what went on, from the instant you were born
Through your early years
And if you can fasten on that moment, and expand through the afterglow
You can reverse your mind in time, and travel back to when
The earth was formed
The sky was born
And the universe began
Riders of the rainbow
Let it grow, let it grow
You have left your body
Return when you may
Save it for another day, beyond you
