A Page Is Turned

Bebo Norman

A page is turned by the wind to a boy in curly grin
With a world to conquer at the age of ten
But as history unfolds and the storybook is told
He finds salvation but not at the hands of manBut God of second chance
Picked him up and He let him dance

Through a world that is not kind

And all this time preparing him the oneTo hold him up when he comes undone Beneath the storm, beneath the sun

And now a man, here you stand

Your day has comeA page is turned in this world to reveal a little girl With a heart that's bigger, as it is unfurled

By the language in her soul that's teaching her to grow

With a careful cover of love that will not failAnd the God of second chance

Picked her up and He let her dance

Through a world that is not kind

And all this time, preparing her the oneTo hold her up when she comes undone

Beneath the storm, beneath the sun And grown up tall, here you are

Your day has comeBeneath the air of autumn, she took him by his hand

Warm within the ardor, she took his heart instead

And high upon the mountain, he asked her for her hand

Just for her handA page is turned in this life, he's making her his wife

And there is no secret to the source of this much life

When the grace that falls like rain is washing them again

Just a chance to somehow rise above this landWhere the God of second chance

Will pick them up and he'll let them dance

Through a world that is not kind

And all this time they're sharing with the oneThat holds them up when they come undone

Beneath the storm, beneath the sun

And once again, here you stand

I said, once again, here you stand

Your day has come

Lyrics provided by https://damnlyrics.com/