

Bones Are Breaking

Poor Old Lu

This song has always been one of my favorites, for some reason. It wasn't a single. We didn't really play it in concert (just once, that I can remember). It rarely stuck out to people as a "strong" song off of the album, but I always liked it. I think the recording (with the preceding mess-up) is very cool. I always dug the really large 'tom' drums at the beginning AND the bridge remains one of my personal favorites! Lyrically this song is pretty straight forward, I think. It talks about our usual difficulties, that is, being "worn out" and dealing with a new day ('is it daybreak'). The chorus wraps up the essence of the problem, "i can't hold this weight upon my shoulders anymore...". What this song does very differently is it wraps up the solution in the bridge... in (4) short lines... "so I.... give all.... to You.... my God". That's it. Enough said. is it daybreak? i'm sure and you're feeling weary there is so much, i know it's just got to end soonwell, i can't hold this weight

upon my shoulders anymore
my bones are breaking
hands are shaking
with everythingare you worn out? i'm sure not happy nearly too far in such to know you just have to break soonwell, i can't hold this weight
upon my shoulders anymore
my bones are breaking
hands are shaking
with everythingso i
give all
to you
my Godwell, i can't hold this weight
upon my shoulders anymore
my bones are breaking
hands are shaking
with everythingwell, i can't hold this weight
upon my shoulders anymore
my bones are breaking
my bones are breaking
my bones are breaking
my bones are breaking

Lyrics provided by

<https://damnlyrics.com/>