

Otto

Wilson

Would you sail across the world to find it
The widths that could contain your sweet wading
For months Did she come along when you asked her
To grab the difference between the ringing
And the sun But it's so small, now, so small
Forgive me dear friend
Those bitter things
They're so small now, so small Did the dark swallow you whole
Did the sea get your ghost
See I didn't hear you leave without us
So small, now, we're so small This city is a thief, and you knew it
Take another bite, another piece
Dragging the soul from me Those stories that held you, Otto
They were never big enough to keep you
They were never big enough to keep you Did the dark swallow you whole
And did the sea get your ghost
'Cause I, I didn't hear you leave ahead of us The world swallowed you whole
The night got your ghost
See I didn't hear you leave without us
Rest all, now, rest all
