Lee Rogers

By the station side, trying to buy some time

Stubbed out his cigarette, gazes on down the line

Was kinda late in Spring but it felt like Winter was racing in

As he thought about her, and all the things that could have been
You taught me to fly, you taught me how to whisper

You taught me to cry, you showed me how to listen

I love you sometimes, and I need you sometimes

Somethings changed and I dont know where

It's just easier when you're not there
The last train pulls in, but he turns around again
Starts to walk away, something was stopping him

Why'd she go and write that note, was doing just fine all alone

Packed himself a bag, didn't even tell no one
You taught me to fly, you taught me how to whisper
You taught me to cry, you showed me how to listen
I love you sometimes, and I need you sometimes
Somethings changed and I dont know where
It's just easier when you're not there
