

Paul's Grotesque

Man Man

he eats an avocado writes novels on her navel climbs out her bedroom window while she's asleep she speaks of venom cobras dark matter, supernovas cars crashes & tsunamis that bring the rain he talks with great bravado drinks baby shirley temples fights with a palm of marbles does it hurt does it hurt she squeeze the honey bottle on an overripe tomato don't care when all the ants go right up her skirt nobody knows where the time goes where the grind goes they meet one summer party eating banh with the cabbies throwing empties at the police oh how they laughed she cut a smokey figure she splintered in his fingers so deep that even tweezers couldn't pull him out they dance in tiny halos like moths around a candle or atoms too unstable but they don't care
nobody knows
nobody known where the time goes
where the grind grows
will you leave a healthy corpse will you beat a dying horse will you leave the headlights on will you write a swan song will you eulogized will you have apologized were you running high tonight will you even care

nobody knows
