

At The End Of A Song

The Carpenters

They tell me
Somewhere this life isn't crazy
But I've traveled the world far and wide
And I say they're wrong
And don't sell me
Stories that music's a lady
It's not when the singer's alone
At the end of a song
At the end of a song, there's no one
After the last note is played
Only the memory stays
Then even that fades away
And there's nothing so hard
As convincing your heart
That you should start singing again
You told me
Nothing could change perfect lovers
But like every promise you made
It broke before long
It's lonely
Falling away from each other
But we've come to the last of our words
And the end of a song
At the end of a song, there's no one
After the last note is played
Only the memory stays
Then even that fades away
And there's nothing so hard
As convincing your heart
That you should start singing again
That you should start singing again

Lyrics provided by

<https://damnllyrics.com/>