Not Tonight, Not Today

Bobby Long

I'm walking past the close of the parade and this rain is killed by falling snow I saw you lean into the corner listening to all of them talking about what they know I don't blame you for being there but you know you didn't have to believe it two coins on the ground gently gleaming two more faces for you to believe in,I'm so sorry for this night you say, I need to leave before I lose my mind things shouldn't of turned out this way at least not tonight, at least not todaysomeone outside lit a fire to burn that soft white flesh away, I saw some old friends waving to me as the crowds fell and made their way I stood there looking out for you under some cold old melting tree
I saw you in your mums old car wearing the same sad look as meas the patrons set the switch of the bright lights
I drank the cold bottles you bought me and fell into the colors that showed me that the lights are colder now
